This publication is a report on a systematic review that consolidated and analyzed the body of literature that has been produced to date regarding the relationship between literacy and health outcomes and the evidence about interventions intended to improve the health of people with low literacy. The review was intended to examine what aspects of health care literacy skills are related to, and what effective interventions exist to improve health literacy to affect use of health care services, health outcomes, and cost of health care. The report provides an overview of health literacy and health literacy measurements as well as recommendations for future research on health literacy.
