

Blogs

From front-line interpreters and CLAS managers to university researchers and national policymakers, DiversityRx believes in giving people in the field a chance to share their experiences and expertise. Our blogs let you hear from your peers — and offer you the opportunity to participate in the dialogue through comments and your own blog postings.

Four categories of blogs can be found in this section:

- Director's Notes: [1] Reflections on recent news, research, resources, and trends from the field from the director of DiversityRx [2].
- Your Voices: [3] Experts and front-line people offer observations and recommendations from their own experience. We invite you to submit a posting to this blog – please visit our blog guidelines [4] for details.
- Q&A from the Field: [5] We get some great questions and answers from our listserv participants and we share some here that have been lightly edited with permission of the authors. We invite you to add your thoughts to any of the Q&As already posted here – and you are welcome to submit a question [6] of your own.
- DiversityRx Conference Updates: [7] Regular updates on the March 2013 DiversityRx conference in Oakland.

Save a blog post to Your Favorites [8]: As a DiversityRx Member (join free [9]) you can save any blog post that you would like to remember to a list of Your Favorites. To save a blog post simply click the 'Add to Your Favorites' link at the bottom of the post. To access your list of saved materials, scroll down to the bottom right-hand corner of your screen.
